The book I recently read was Rose, who grew out of Tupac concrete by Amaru Shakur. At first I thought it would be a book full of Tupacs rap, but when I started reading I realized that this book was full of rhymes, but it wasn't rap it was poetry, which is one thing about this book that interested me. Many people probably think this book will be about gangster life most of his rap about, but instead it's about all his thoughts and emotions/feelings about the people he loved, the people the book I recently read was Rose, which grew out of the concrete of Tupac Amaru Shakur. At first I thought it would be a book full of Tupacs rap, but when I started reading I realized that this book was full of rhymes, but it wasn't rap it was poetry, which is one thing about this book that interested me. Many people probably think this book will be about gangster life most of his rap about, but instead it's about all his thoughts and emotions/feelings about the people he loved, the people he lost, and the fame. Before this book I never knew how someone could successfully put their emotions or thoughts on paper in this way. This book changed the way I think of Tupac before I thought he was a man of little emotion that felt close to anything, but now I see that he feels everything anyone does, he just keeps his feelings on paper in poetic form in a book I never heard until I read it recently.
